I never thought I'd see you again.

What comes to your mind when you see that phrase? A reunion with a former lover? A shocking encounter with a dark face from your past? A dearly held memory come to life . . . or one you've tried desperately to purge from your mind?

In this extraordinary collection of original fiction, sixteen great storytellers spin the tales that filled their imaginations when considering that sentence:

- New York Times bestselling author Allison Brennan brings us the reunion of father and daughter under deadly circumstances.
- USA Today bestselling author Janet Tronstad weaves a tale of lost love on a Christmas Eve during the Great Depression.

Wish there had been more

By amypersian

Initially I was unsure about how I would like this book. Previously I had never read anything with this type of format. The most interesting part of this book was that they all included the line...."I never thought I'd see you again. Surprisingly when I finished reading the collection of short stories, I found myself wishing that there had been more contributors to this book. My favorite short story was the first one written by Allison Brennan. It illustrated a complicated father daughter relationship in an adventure format.

One of my favorite aspects was the mix of genres that were included. It keeps the reader interested and also exposes them to genres that they might not ordinarily read.

Would love to read another book like this with a different line. Kudos to the publishers, The Story Plant.

Well Worth Reading Collection of Short Stories!

By Evie

I Never Thought I'd See You Again, edited by Lou Aronica, is a collection of sixteen short stories by sixteen successful writers. In the introduction Mr. Aronica reveals that the title is actually a "writing prompt" that was presented to the writers and it is used in all the stories. Each author introduces their offering and I found these to be as interesting as the stories themselves. The subject content varies from story to story and include themes of what really matters in life and death.

In Facing the Mirror, by Dianne Despain, Maggie Holmes learns she has cancer while she is an Emergency Room. Her experience is almost surreal: The physician who gives her the diagnosis has more interest in getting to a party than comforting her patient. Then there is the oncologist who after ordering tests has not gotten back in touch with her with the results after seven weeks. The author's writing is direct and poignant. When reading this well written story the reader is one with Maggie Holmes.

Fabian's Wake by Laura Resnick opens with Eileen expressing surprise and shock when her deceased father leaves his coffin during his wake. It becomes clear that she is the only one to witness this and she is the only one who can hear him speak. There is a reason for these occurrences. With wit and engaging dialogue the author has crafted a marvelous story about regrets and family.

Solomon's Paradox, by Kelly McClymer, is a story I will never forget. Ben is responsible for his best friend's death. In this mesmerizing story, atonement is offered in the form of allowing the deceased friend to return from the dead and to live in Ben's body for one year. This is their haunting tale.

All the stories in this collection leave an impression and each is worth reading.

I received this book free of charge through NetGalley and I give this review of my own free will.

an interesting book that shouldn't be missed reading
By Infantina

I never thought I'd see you is a collection of prompt short stories that tempted me a lot into reading the book last week. Due to my large TBR list I had to postpone it for the time being. I was very desperate to read this book as the title was very intriguing and also I love short stories. The advantage of reading short stories is that if one story is bad it doesn't mean all the other stories also have to be bad and you don't have to be disappointed by the whole book.

Since all the stories were written by different authors, I had no expectations, only curious to know what I would find in the next story. It was a pleasant surprise that all the stories were well written in a manner that inspired me a lot. I can not really point out which story I liked the most. There were stories which I hadn't anticipated it to end the way it did.

The first story had so much potential of becoming into a full length novel. I would have liked the story to continue. It was about a father and a daughter relationship. All the characters were well portrayed in this particular story.

Facing the mirror was a story which seemed as if it was real. It has succeeded in delivering the anxieties and real emotions of a cancer patient. After reading it, I had a feeling that a person who is diagnosed with cancer would react the same way as Maggie did. Janet Trotstad's Christmas Eve and Peresphone's granddaughter by Alyssa day was also my favorites.

In one particular story, I lost all my patience, so I flipped through the pages to find out the ending. It was Solomon's Paradox by Kelly McClymer. I didn't get this story right when I initially began reading it. I have to appreciate the author for writing this extraordinary story because I found this story to be very different and very likeable.

Overall, I would say this book was interesting to read. I enjoyed reading all the stories but only half of the stories made it to my most favorite list. I don't have anything to criticize about the other half but it's just that the stories weren't impressive as I thought it would be.(3.5)
