TWO CHRISTIAN PSYCHOLOGY PROFESSORS PONDER THE CONNECTION BETWEEN PSYCHOLOGY AND CHRISTIANITY

By Steven H Propp

David G. Myers (born 1942) is a professor of psychology at Hope College; he has written/cowritten many books, such as The human puzzle: Psychological research and Christian belief, The inflated self, Psychology Through the Eyes of Faith, Psychology & Christianity, What God Has Joined Together: The Christian Case for Gay Marriage, etc. Malcolm Jeeves is a psychology professor who has also written books such as Psychology & Christianity: The view both ways. [NOTE: page numbers below refer to the 224-page 1987 edition.]

They wrote in the Foreword of this 1987 book, "It is the conviction of the authors... that although psychology and Christianity are profoundly different, yet they interact... It is our conviction ... that Christianity is not just an expression of feelings or values but that it incorporates a body of claims; and that those claims are not just about God but about this world of ours, especially its human beings. Christianity incorporates nothing less than a world view. And about the human beings in that world, psychology speaks." (Pg. ix) They add, "This book is about the relationship between what psychologists are discovering and what Christians believe. Unlike most other books on psychology and religion, this one... identifies major insights regarding human nature that college and university students will encounter in a basic psychology course and ponders how the resulting human image connects with Christian belief." (Pg. xiii)

They suggest, "different levels of explanation can be complementary. The methods of psychology are appropriate, and appropriate ONLY, for their own purposes. Psychological explanation has provided satisfying answers to many important questions regarding why people think, feel, and act as they do. But it does not even pretend to answer life's ultimate questions. Let us therefore celebrate and use psychology for what it offers us, never forgetting what it cannot accomplish." (Pg. 9-10) They add, "Believing that both the natural and biblical data reveal God's truth, we can allow scientific and theological perspectives to challenge and inform each other... There is an additional reason why the Bible does not give us a completed psychology and why we therefore need psychological science. The Scriptures must embody truth not just for us in our twentieth century age but for all people, past, present, and future." (Pg. 15-16)

They argue, "Although Christian faith does not promise escape from the stresses and woes of life, it can help us walk through the valley of deepest darkness. It does so first by offering us an identity---a knowledge of who we are, of our ultimate values, of our mission in life... Second, religious communities offer support in times of stress... Finally, religious experience has the potential to be therapeutic." (Pg. 149-150)

For those Christians looking for a strongly "positive" attitude toward the relationship between psychology and Christianity, this book will be of great interest.
