In this, book four of the Gatekeeper Series, we join John and Pete as they lead the Company toward sanctuary in the Colorado Rockies. The isolated community they seek, left virtually untouched by the disaster, offers the only real hope of peace and survival in a post-apocalyptic world filled with death and destruction. But to reach it, they must travel a long and dangerous, thousand-mile journey across four southern states.

After having endured many local hardships, the Company embarks on their long journey despite the obvious risks involved. Prepared, they willingly hit the road with their guard up. But as they cautiously make their way toward Colorado over less traveled routes, they find there's no way to avoid the disaster's far reaching effects. Everyone is desperate to survive, and a traveling group of well-stocked refugees is seen as an easy and vital target.

This story also includes the traveling survival experience of Mark, John's other close friend from San Antonio. As the last holdout from the early warning email sent by John (Curtain Fall), Mark leaves home after a vicious and deadly gang battle. With only a mountain bike, and a few well-thought out supplies, Mark heads north in hopes of finding and joining up with Pete and John. His journey is also fraught with danger and misunderstanding, and several unanticipated encounters push the limits of his mental and physical endurance to new levels.

I've enjoyed all aspects of the series through Tread Fearless

I've enjoyed all aspects of the series through Tread Fearless! There's good insight for people that have never considered disaster scenarios (most of us) woven throughout an interesting story. I'm really looking forward to the next book!

A great follow up! Can't wait for the next one in the series!

By Blackhawks Rock

I loved Tread Fearless. I love the addition of the two characters Mark and Lauren. In the earlier books, Mark is mentioned several times and in this book, his story really picks up. His travels and explorations of the FEMA camps might shed some light on what is a possibility if you end up in a FEMA camp someday. Lauren is a breath of fresh air as well. John and Pete and the crew are making their way to Colorado and their travels are also enlightening. I really like how even though we get a view of the bad things that can happen or what bad people can do with power, in this book, we also see a lot of good people just trying to survive. We get a glimpse of all kinds of people and all walks of life in both John's and Mark's travels. The cattle ranchers in Oklahoma and the two sets of "just kids" trying to make sense of what is happening as they are lost without their parents, the lawyer with the 2 boys, etc...you will see what I mean when you read the book. We also get a glimpse of survivors whose spouses are dead. A very real probability or possibility in light of this new post-disaster world. And of course, a little bit of love is in the air too. A nice touch for the romantics in us. Great book. Can't wait for the next book in the series!
